Were they to be laid on the table? Were they to be rejected? Were they to be turned out of the house? No—they must be referred to a Committee who would examine into the condition and wants of these various classes and report truly upon them.

He had very little fear, however, that the manufacturing interest of this country was about to receive some new degree of protection from the necessity of the call, let the opinions of men be what they might on the abstract principle of protection itself. This Government could not be extried on, at least in the mode in which it was at present proposed to be carried on, under a system of 20 per cent duties.

Mr W., though denying that the constitutionality of a Protective Tariff was any longer an open question, proceeded to demonstrate its constitutionality from high authorities, and to shew that all former Tariffs be far from having been carried by the exclusive votes or for the exclusive benefit of the manufacturers of the East, had, on the contrary, though incidentally benefitting those Manufacturers, been carried by the votes of the Middle and Western States.

The argument in favor of Protective duties was one of the ablest of the session.

When Mr W. concluded, the House adjourned.

GENERAL PUTNAM.

The following letter, vindicating the truth notice of their protest. of a story which has been so often told in New England about this brave old General, is from a late number of the Knickerbocker. It was written by that notorious old "smuggler and Tory," (as the Locofoco papers call him,) ELIJAH PAYNE, of Williamstown :-

To the Editor of the Knickerbocker:
Sin:—I have seen in the Knickerbocker for August, an article relative to General Putnam. I propose to make some temarks upon that article.

I am now more than eighty-four years old. My father, Seth Payne, and General Israel Putnam were extemporaries and neighbors in Poinfeet. I, from my earliest recallection until I was twenty-five years old, often heard my father tell the wolf story, which was exactly as follows:

"A wolf had made depredations on the sheepfolds in the neighborhood. At length General, then Mr Patanan, my father, and one or two other neighbors, and a negro of Mr Patanan's, with a large dog, went Putams, my father, and one of two other neighbors, and a negro of Mr Putamas, with a large dog, went in pursuit of the wolf, and chased him into a horizontal cavern in a lodge of roc's.

"The dog was put into the mouth of the cavern, and the negro followed, to crowd him forward, but did not succeed. Mr Putamas there will be proved him forward, but did not succeed. Mr Putamas there will be seriously be stricken out should the bill be seriously entertained.

Again, the fact that the proposed Exchequer being a tourn or me government, would possess the power of bringing actions at law, while it could not be sued, is considered dangerous, as giving it the power, under possible contingencies, of flooding the country with like companions remonstrated against bis, as dangerous. The discharge of a gun might bring the rocks upon him and crush him. But he persisted; and the roce was again fastened to his lees.

"He went in with his give and a torch; and when near the wolf, he fred, and upon the report of the gin hie was drawn out again upon his belly. When he came out he was perfectly calm. He went in again with the rope round his legs, took the dead wolf by the ears, and in this manner was dragged out on his belly the third time, with the addition of the wolf.

"From my childhood until his death, I was well acquainted with Putamin. He was a modest unassemine was and lad nather of the braggadories."

The exhausted condition of the payment of the current expenses of the Government. To-day a proper to the plan and that section would unquestionally be stricken out should the bill be seriously entertained.

Again, the fact that the proposed Exchequer being a tourn or me government, would possess the power of bringing actions at law, while it could not be sued, is considered dangerous, as giving it the power, and remained the power, and remained the power, and remained the power, and remained the power and there is not a while the old fafferent degrees of importance; and there is not a Whig in the scane, who, although the migh

> We learn from the Evening Journal that Gov. Seward in his preparations for the New Year, has substituted lemonade and cold water for punch and wine. This is a bold innovation, but one which the spirit of the times demanded. The temperance cause has a right to claim an example from the highest authorities. The amount heretofore expended for wine, &c. by the Governor, will now be given to the poor.

The wolf story as above related, was universally believed in Ponfret. His courage there was always admitted; and some of his early deeds, which were thought to discover a great degree of courage, were thought by some to amount to rashness.

I am aware that the credibility of this statement must depend upon the character of two persons for truth and venerity—my father and myself. My father must be living in Ponfret and Brooklyn and that vicinity, in Connecticut, individuals who can vouch to his good character in this respect, as well us in all other respects.
